Old Friends

by Connie Cuff

Our club was treated to a special demonstration by Lana Kline on Pet Massage. Some of our dogs had the opportunity to learn first hand how to benefit from this therapy. The No.1 benefit is the relaxation in the animal and the person. It helps the immune system of both and establishes an emotional bond between owner and dog.

A group from our club recently visited children in an after school program to demonstrate to them how our therapy dogs perform, to educate them on greeting a dog and owner, and bite prevention. In the group, the majority of children had a dog in their household. Many of them fielded questions to us which showed their interest in our demonstration.

Studies have shown that interacting with and caring for pets are sources of developing behaviors and ideas related to nurturing others. In research conducted by the Delta Society it found that if a mother was employed, the child was more involved and attached to a pet.

In a book by Barbara Shumamflang titled "Happy Kids, Happy Dogs: Building a Friendship Right from the Start" she explains that parents must do three things to create a good relationship between their dog and their child: actively coach the child rather than merely supervise, teach the dog to have positive associations with the child, and evaluate interactions by monitoring the dog for signs of stress or other warning signs. She says it is essential to have a safety zone for the dog to go to when the dog shows signs of stress.

In Frank Ascione's "Children and Animals: Exploring the Roots of Kindness and Cruelty" he writes about the relationship between the abuse of animals and both physical and sexual violence toward people. As an indication of future problems, a child's cruelty to animals often shows up at an earlier age than bullying, vandalism or cruelty to people. He focuses on the importance of developing the ability to empathize with animals while young and the links between empathy for animals and empathy for people.

Even if you have no children in your household, you may be a grandparent or know of a family who has young children and a pet. A little nurturing and education on your part could help with the human and pet bond and eliminate the need for families to turn their dogs over to shelters because they are out of control and do not get along with their children.

A little information can go a long way in helping everyone.

Till next time,

Connie

CONGRESS PASSES AKC-SUPPORTED VERSION OF "PETS" BILL

--Bill Addresses Challenges Faced By Pet Owners during Disasters--

New York, NY - this week, the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives passed by unanimous consent the "Pets Evacuation and Transportation Standards Act of 2006," known as "PETS." PETS addresses the problems experienced by pet owners before, during and after the 2005 hurricane season. The enacted bill includes the stronger Senate language -- which the AKC supported and lobbied for-- rather than the weaker House version of the bill. The bill now goes to the President, who is expected to sign it.

Amidst evacuation for hurricanes Katrina and Rita, many pet owners were forced to leave their pets behind because emergency relief agencies, transportation facilities and shelters were not equipped to accommodate them. This caused some persons to resist evacuation orders, slowing down the process and putting human life at risk. Equally problematic was the public reaction to the widespread publicity given to the plight of the pets that were left behind. A recent AKC survey revealed that 67 percent of pet owning households nationwide said they would refuse future evacuation orders if they were unable to take their pets with them.

The PETS bill requires that disaster relief and emergency management agencies include provisions for the needs of households and individuals with pets and service animals in disaster relief plans as a condition for federal approval of such plans. The bill also makes providing services to individuals with household pets and service animals a legitimate activity on which to spend emergency and disaster relief funding, and authorizes the federal government to provide funds to states and local authorities for animal emergency preparedness purposes, and for procurement, construction, leasing, or renovating of emergency shelter facilities that will accommodate people with pets and service animals.

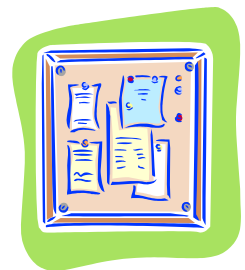

AKC President Dennis Sprung commended the Congressional action, saying "I want to thank the Congress for acting promptly and decisively to address this problem. This legislation will go a long way in assuring that the disastrous situation that occurred in 2005 is not repeated. I also want to thank the many members of the purebred dog fancy who supported and helped advocate for the passage of this important legislation."

Sprung also noted that the successful passage of the PETS bill was a collaborative effort involving many animal interest organizations and AKC was pleased to be a leader among them.

During the aftermath of hurricane Katrina, the AKC sent staff to the affected areas to assist with the needs of displaced animals and affected fanciers. Many individuals as well as 545 AKC clubs and organizations made donations to the AKC/CAR Canine Support and Relief Fund, enabling AKC to organize and support multiple airlifts transporting dogs to facilities out of the affected region. In addition, AKC recently hired a full-time employee who is responsible for coordinating disaster relief efforts on behalf of the AKC and AKC/CAR.
